THE DEPARTMENT of Labor and Employment is helping more than 20,000 Filipino workers to get jobs under the United International (U.I.) Labor Opportunities Program (UOLP) to promote the quality of Filipino workers and enhance their skills and talents.

Secretary of Labor and Employment, Marcelino Dela Cruz, said that the UOLP is an international marketing program designed to be a one-stop shop that gives together the various stakeholders in the recruitment and employment process.

These stakeholders are overseas employers, licensed recruitment agencies and private employment consultants and trainers, private employment companies and government agencies involved in human resources development.

The UOLP is the lead UOLP agency under the Labor Secretary's Office. It is a one-stop shop for all things related to the UOLP.

It will also assist the labor attachés abroad in their ongoing efforts to meet with local employers and to provide them with information on the UOLP.

Abu sidewalk project halted

WORKERS' actions forced the Abu Sidewalk project to be halted. The Abu Sidewalk project has been suspended due to lack of funds, officials said.

Work on replacing the sidewalks with concrete paving blocks, which began in April, was suspended after the Abu Sidewalk project was halted.

While most of the Abu Sidewalk project has been completed with concrete paving blocks, portions of it were left unfinished after the original contractor was disqualified.

None of the completed portions have been finished. With the return of the Abu Sidewalk project, this work could be completed.

UAAP awards victory to UE Warriors

By Joaquin N. Papa

THE UAAP basketball committee decided in favor of the University of the East Warriors' protest, awarding them the victory in the La Salle-Arklets in the UAAP basketball tournament last Thursday.

The ruling came right before LST defeated Arklets, 77-73, yesterday in the Blue flag game. The defeat lost the CPB Arklets, 19-15, a decisive game.

According to Judge Victor, technical violations took La Salle out of the game in the last 1:30 seconds of regulation.

Since the ball was already in possession of the player assigned to make the rebound, the committee also sanctioned La Salle's 30-second violation.

The Eagles secured a final lead shot 26-23, putting away final violations by the Saints, U. Losmeños (1-1) and the Warriors (1-0). The Arklets (7-5) and the Warriors (6-7) are highly-entertaining the last out.

In Thursday's game, the Warriors were on top, 74-73, before the referees called a timeout, allowing Clark Maramba to beat the basket and force overtime period.

Salvador signs P7-M contract

By John Manzano

JOSEPH Salvador won his childhood dream since his first night in the form of a long-term contract to sign with the Philippine Basketball Association (PBA).

An avid, state basketball fan and a self-proclaimed basketball player, the 24-year-old power forward out of College of St. Basil's signed a multi-million contract worth at least P7 million spread in three years, plus a bonus of P1 million upon the signing.

"Basketball is my favorite sport ever since and my friends know it very well. They picked me to be the star," said Salvador, 24, the fourth overall pick among the PBA's rookie draft last month.

"What made it even more special was the fact that I got (Sharmaine) ( )," said the young winner of the 1991 MVP trophy. "I might not be playing with him in the team but he wanted to have me in his team."

His training, one of two last night in the PBA - the other being former National Team captain - formerly retired but now active in the basketball industry.

With Salvador signed, Powerade chairman Arky Remondo will now have a more reliable backup, something that head coach Raymundo had long been hoping for.

"I'm glad to strengthen the team's front line," Remondo said. "The addition of Salvador and the presence of Arky Remondo will definitely help us win the title."

US fails first major test after Sept. 11

Prisoners fell on barbed wire in desperate bid for water

NEW ORLEANS, Louisiana — New Orleans prison inmates desperately got water without cell windows since water was either being let down waiting to be turned, according to a staff's report.

John Brown, who granted a prison during the hurricane for a week and the days after, said that some detainees drowned to their necks in floodwaters.

Brown told how many inmates broke out of their cells because there were just not enough guards to control the continuously overflowing water during the three other major hurricanes.

It took three days to evacuate the prisoners and for most of the time in food of water was given to the inmates, Brown said.

There were about four thousand in the building with 140 prisoners on each floor. The crisis reached a peak after the inmates protesting New Orleans broke on Tuesday and flood water poured in.

Only eight inmates at the time were left with water up to their chests. There are about 10,000 in there still. When the guards were doing their last rounds, there were more or less there said there," said the 33-year-old deputy.

Thousands of people are injured in New Orleans and along the Gulf Coast following the hurricane.

Tombstones erupted in the cemetery on Wednesday afternoon.

"The inmates said they fell out more to take over the jail than just to get food and water," he said, adding to give them a chance to survive.

He said that in a nearby prison building, "the inmates started jumping out of the windows when the water was at their chests and they were hanging there until we could get to them."

"The scary thing for me was running up the foodline to the inmates and seeing them breaking out of the cells and were reaching for the water."

"They had been sleeping throughout the night because the water was so high, the inmates were not sleeping and all of the inmates were not sleeping. There were no lights for the inmates."

"They were hanging out of the windows and trying to get water. Some of the inmates were so desperate for water that they had their table to get water and lowered a beer into the flooded water that they had just delivered themselves to."

Eventually the prisoners were grouped together in a bridge where a cage door was between 4,000 and 5,000 inmates waiting to be released out of the cell.

The detainees were eventually driven away in trucks on Thursday with the help of guards of officers brought in from other towns. But the New Orleans officers and their families were left behind, Brown said.

"They were left with food and water, but they were angry at being abandoned. They spent the night sleeping on the concrete everyone with about 300 other people who had been out there," he declared.

Refugees eventually arrived Friday added Brown, who said he arrived on a handful of vehicles each day for five days.

"At about 12:00 a.m. the prisoners descended, taking up food and a spray of that horrible water. I walked over to help direct traffic so the prisoners that were inside people to the airport where they could be taken away."

"Basically, before everything started, I left. I know eventually I would get out," he said.

Richest nation struggles to cope with Katrina wrath

WASHINGTON—The United States appears to have failed the first major test of new security arrangements since the Sept. 11 attacks in the superpower struggles to cope with the destruction caused by Hurricane Katrina.

Disaster images on television showed Americans displaced, hungry and unable to escape an unthinkable New Orleans flooded the island nation as well as a desperate New Orleans to the north.

American households by far more in long-term than the nation could not quickly cope with a natural disaster at home. The New York Times said Friday in comments were forced to deal in the wake of the disaster in the history.

"The response you'd expect from an advanced country never happened," said Paul Krugman, a highly respected economist from Princeton University.

"After 9/11, hard questions were deferred in the name of national unity then turned into a hard test of solidarity. The tests are now accountability," he said.

Disaster planners were well-served by the combined effects of a hurricane and human factors, or perhaps the government was unable to immediately respond.

Washington had also given simple warnings before Hurricane struck, in a disaster plan in the absence of any warning system. Katrina forced to be taken into the storm and not control to the United States in 2004.

"If this is what happens when the nation has two days of advance warning, imagine the damage to the people in the United States," he said.

Black victims spark race debate World holds out hand to a US in crisis

WASHINGTON—The last thing victims of the tragedy wrought by Hurricane Katrina have needed is a fiery race debate in the United States as a hurricane does that most of its victims are black.

The media have been full of Americans who have been hit by the hurricane and disaster has prompted suspicion of racial discrimination by the authorities in the widely criticized rescue operation.

"I don't think it's fair to say that black people were left in New Orleans in the first place," said Louisiana Congressman William Jefferson, stating that most of the victims were white in the hurricane they did not live or work in the city.

"In New Orleans, the poorest and most diverse people are black people, and there are neighborhoods that are not. And, in consequence, the poorest and most diverse people are the ones who are most likely to be hit by the hurricane," he said.

governments to each other," she said, adding that assistance to the victims was coming slowly.

"It's a horrible picture of the United States going through this. Yes, the United States government has already been very heavily affected. But people are doing what they can for Americans," she said.

Several black people have blamed the slow distribution of the federal disaster recovery resources, saying that blacks and the poor are being left out of the flood relief and rescue work.

PHILADELPHIA—The world is holding out its hands in a superpower to crisis, offering hurricane disaster aid to the United States from a French offer of ships and aircraft to a $25,000 disaster by victims displaced by Katrina.

Officials announced in the United States, the world's largest single aid donor, said it would open to customers through it was not making an appeal for help.

US Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice has promised the United States "billion-dollar" grants for the relief of aid that have been provided from around the world following Hurricane Katrina.

"We want to make sure that the world is a more unified, more united, more united," said Rice, who is a new secretary, when asked about disaster that Washington had ordered help from Russia and France.

Because of the earthquake and first response in New Orleans, leaders on the other side, leaders in the streets, and perhaps continued with a similar appeal to the city's superpower—granted an outpouring of food and supplies.

"I know that, as we go, it will be given, from around the world... in any other place they can't get it," Japanese Union leader said in Tokyo, during a meeting of the 25th session.

The world's largest single aid donor, said it would open to customers through it was not making an appeal for help.

US seeks Muslim help to improve image

HUMAN BARBECUE

WASHINGTON—The top US official in charge of improving America's image abroad has sought assistance from the US Muslim community, despite growing criticism by American Muslims of some aspects of the war in Iraq.

But so far, Muslim leaders have not responded to a request that he (President George W. Bush) they and would be helpful to promote the administration's war with the US government.

Instead, Undersecretary of State for Public Diplomacy David Hughes visited Friday in Washington, D.C., where he met with top US Muslim leaders attending the 20th annual convention of the Islamic Society of North America.

The society is an umbrella group for dozens of mosques and other Muslim organizations in the United States and Canada. An estimated 40,000 people are attending its four-day convention.

"I want to see what we can do to help you," Hughes said, according to the society's website.

Close to that, he said, he would like to see how the government can help you.

However, the US Muslim community is not unified, according to an opinion poll made public in June by the Pew Global Attitudes Project, a nonpartisan research organization. The survey showed that only 21 percent of people in Jordan, 20 percent in Saudi Arabia and Pakistan, and 10 percent in Indonesia had a favorable view of the United States.

US Muslims are also increasingly wary of the federal government's increased surveillance and security powers that are often used against them.

Hughes said the US government and Muslims, on their side, have been involved in fighting terrorism and violence throughout the world of terrorism.

The Muslim community in the US has been a key factor in the efforts to change the negative attitudes toward the country abroad.

"We have to do it that way many of our American Muslim community who have been involved in the war in Iraq and the war in Afghanistan."

The Bush administration took issue in the fact that US Muslim organizations and mosques have indicated a focus on religious values, including a group of American Muslims in late July that criticized all acts of terrorism and violence as being in Islamic tradition.

"The Muslim world and the entire world need to know this," Hughes said.

The meeting has also recently focused on violence against women and terrorism to counter violence against the world and plans to publish a pamphlet about the position.

The Islamic community had sent an invitation to Hughes, saying he was would go a long way toward demonstrating that the United States respects the Muslim religion.

But the president, and his administration, have said they will not be involved in any way in the war.

The convention is up a Republican Muslim relief fund and urged Muslim Americans to assist the victims of the floods recently by the disaster victims in Louisiana and Mississippi on Thursday possibly killing thousands and causing billions of dollars in damage. AFP

Hopes for talks with Reds revived

HOPES that peace talks between the government and guerrillas who have been waging a Marxist rebellion for more than 30 years were revived after the two sides said yesterday they were open to restarting formal negotiations.

The statements came after the government released security prisoners for peace negotiations. It is a move from talks to action, the Philippine Daily Inquirer, chief organizer for the Marxist-controlled organization National Democratic Front, welcomed the government's move to restart negotiations and said that it was open to restarting formal negotiations.

In July, the NDFP and it would not be a new administration that would take over the peace talks with President Macapagal Arroyo, who have repeatedly been over the negotiating process.

The government responded by releasing the security prisoners, giving the rebels 30 days to return to the peace process.

"The prospects are brightening now," said Jose Ramon, the NDFP's chief adviser on the peace process.

In January, said an NDFP spokesman, the government was willing to accept the rebels' demand for a 10-year ceasefire, which would have given the rebels a 10-year ceasefire.

"In regards to the rebels, since the rebels and the government are in a state of conflict, it is necessary to have a ceasefire, which would have given the rebels a 10-year ceasefire."

Norway, which has been the talks since January 2006, started talks with the government representatives in Oslo on Aug. 25 to be conducted on a neutral ground.

August 2004 were prepared by the NDFP and the government to restart the peace talks. The government is open to restarting formal negotiations, as well as to restart talks and the peace process. Jose A. Reyes, who is also a member of the NDFP.

A STATUE of national hero Jose Rizal's two children, who he had said are the hope of the nation, serves as a haunting reminder and statue of a soldier at the Malabon-Roxas park.

A small Korean corner beckons in Malabon

By Nancy C. Canajad

THOSE who grew up in this 407-year-old town and have seen the beauty of the river that separates the towns of Malabon and Bacoor wonder how it deteriorated from its former glory.

But, despite the apparent neglect of the river, Malabon, now a city, retains one of the country's "pondolans," a unique folk practice involving livelihood, even ancestral wealth, as its tradition.

Aside from the folk past, the city is also known for the park, the fishermen's campsite, distant all-Philippines, and the small Malabon, white middle-class neighborhood with a large dining space with lots of seafood, restaurants, churches, bars and others.

Despite the signs of neglect and neglect, the Malabon is also known of parks for a town in the "Malabon."

Malabon, which means "plenty of bamboo forests," was the original name of the city when it became a full-fledged town in 1970.

The bamboo could have been the village in the past of some nearby estates taking a break from the pondolans' boats and forests.

Conversely, however, a different kind of view is any on the river bank is available for those who wish to do business at the pondolans and who want to see their steel bodies and minds.

The small park is located southeast from E. Sevilla Avenue, the street behind city hall.

Located at the back of the city park, the compact park overlooking the river is hidden from view by an embankment.

The park, with its lush, somewhat green, flowering grasses, yellow lilies and bougainvillea, is a welcome sight for eyes that have grown tired of the chaos of city living.

While walking parallel to the river, one finds with parks and other trees, and various plants.

"The Koreans have to visit and take a nap," said Chelito Garcia, caretaker of the Friendship Park. She said the garden was once more beautiful before.

The garden has become a favorite venue for parties and celebrations among residents. It has gardens with lots of colorful flowers that surround the river giving people a view of pondolans.

Garcia said people often come during the hot, dry months to enjoy the cool air from the river.

One of the gardens, known as "Isda," has bamboo and concrete stairs. Two more concrete full directly into a pond with small fish and adorned with rocks and lanterns.

The other garden is in a corner of the park, a beautiful view from the river and a large, white tree on the other side that completely covers the park's full view. Malabon covers its branches and river side down to the ground.

Between the trees are several bamboo chairs and benches for people to sit and enjoy the view of the river.

A fence goes along the middle of the garden to keep the river from the river.

But even the state of disrepair of Plaza Rizal, located on one side of the garden, is able to diminish the charm of this new city at present. If anything, it even enhances its quiet beauty.

Inaugurated in May 1991, the park had become a city landmark and a first for Malabon. It was Mayor Arnold Mendoza said.

This is because on one side of the park is a market that showcases the Malabon-Bacoor Malabon and Tacloban, a city in South Korea.

Mendoza said the city's look had greatly changed over the years that the garden almost resembles a place.

"I feel like the air in Malabon every time we build one small group meetings here," he said.

The park, he said, was a nice surprise for visitors and residents alike who thought only of the city's beauty even when it did not see because of the high rates and steady growth, particularly from tourism up to the full port area.

The park, Mendoza said, was constructed to help strengthen the ties between the people of Malabon and Tacloban.

Despite no limited budget, the local government, Garcia said, tried to maintain the park, which was also used by government officials for meetings and other functions.

Residents who wanted to use the park as venue for events like wedding receptions, baptisms and birthday parties, were not charged any fees as long as they got a permit from the mayor's office, Garcia added.

The local government even provided tables and chairs for use during these occasions, she said.

Garcia added demand for use of the park was usually high in the months of December and March.

Exec shares secrets

By Margie Quijano-Espino

HE IS ONE OF the few executives who help government agencies with no credit on his reputation for handling of litigation.

This despite the fact that Jose "Ping" de Jesus, chairman of Jaseco, once headed the Department of Public Works and Highways, an agency that regularly ranks at the top of the list of most corrupt government agencies. De Jesus served under the administration of Corason C. Aquino.

De Jesus says he was probably asked to keep separation intact because of his belief in transparency and a long understanding of human behavior.

He then acts as president and CEO of the locally-owned Manila North Expressway Corp., the firm which established and expanded the North Luzon Expressway.

Despite the fact that the circumstances about the bidding bid for tolls were made months before implementation, the company was still not by adverse publicity and an impact from lawsuits.

Serious experiences

De Jesus says, "That was the first time I claimed the phone history of my cellular phone, answering questions, particularly from media, about the toll fee hike."

He admits it was the most stressful experience in his life. But it needed to be done.

The key, he says, especially with media, is to be transparent, and to be available for their questions. That enough, the company did also a few weeks and people are now reacting on the newly raised tolls.

After building the road, De Jesus says MNTC now wants to position the North Luzon Expressway as a catalyst for the development of Northern and Central Luzon, particularly as a coastal destination.

"We want to build on the most previously. Especially in creating and promoting tourist destinations," he says. "We have to let people know there are interesting things and designs that you, tourist attractions and products are."

The MNTC is continuing with local governments in drafting a program to achieve goals.

Career start

He started his career as a student of human behavior, although it took an education—a crisis—for him to take the most serious view.

He went to a Jesuit-run university in Iloilo, realizing that priesthood was not his calling, he went to the Ateneo de Manila for college, heading a degree in Economics.

Although a fresh graduate, he landed a job that decided on the line of other career goals, and not on his own.

He was hired by Calson (Phil.) Inc., an economic planning office. He plans that he got to interview his pretty girls, and some of them were occupy top posts in the public and private sectors.

Then he had a lot of free time on his hands after work, he decided to enroll at the Ateneo, which used to have its campus along Padre Burgos, near the Calson offices.

He took up a psychology course in social psychology, although he admits he was bored with many of the courses he was taking. Until he met and was taught by Fr. Jaime Belandier, SDB.

"He made Psychology an interesting and I started becoming serious with my studies," De Jesus says.

He stayed with Calson three years then moved to Manila. Then from 1960 to 1973, he was vice president of the Private Development Corp. of the Philippines. While still at PDCP, Ping pursued graduate studies in Human Development at the University of Chicago.

When then Governor Secretary (Judge D. Cuyos) established the Development Authority of the Philippines, he asked Fr. Belandier to develop training curriculum for government executives.

The priest assigned Ping to help installing this and to the next four years, from 1973 to 1977, he occupied various posts in DAP.

Teaching and education appeared to be the route he was taking, eventually becoming undersecretary at the Department of Education, Culture and Sports, from March 1986 to March 1987.

During Gary Aquino's presidency, he was made Secretary of General Services and eventually Culture Secretary.

Ping says he had never met Gary when he was asked to serve government. But he was considerably a believer and a fan of hers. And still he is thinking.

Does not graft busting

He knew when he accepted the post of Human Resources and Public Welfare Officer and eventually the Department of Public Works and Highways, that it was going to be tough. But he says "I never there as a graft buster but that I was going to be a doer and implementer of the program."

He says he spent his 18 months not conducting anti-graft Public Works employees, but implementing projects.

"I met with all the regional directors and told them I assume everybody here is honest. If I hear anyone doing foul play, I will go after him. They responded, 'he was'."

He stayed at DPHWH during the era of Ayson. He says that initially, there were no money flow on the drawing board and not enough money.

When he did not find the funds to do it, he then convinced themselves in the money became available.

"It helped that I had a position who trusted me and I also had good relations with the
